

Policy Regarding Late Senior Theses

Social Studies does not like to impose penalties, and we hope that the policy spelled out here will not have to be applied to any senior. Nevertheless, for the record, this sheet describes the Social Studies policy on late senior theses. This policy is in line with the penalty policies of other social science concentrations.

The deadline for your thesis is 2:00 p.m. on Monday, November 2nd, 2015. Essays submitted after that time will be penalized severely. The grades for a thesis are summa, magna, cum, or non-honors. A thesis that is borderline between two grades will fall to the lower grade if the thesis is submitted on Tuesday, November 3rd. A thesis turned in on Wednesday, November 4th will invariably be penalized a full grade. Penalties accumulate such that a thesis submitted on or after Monday, November 9th (a week or more late), will fail to receive honors.

Penalties will be waived exclusively in cases of medical illness or grave family emergency; students should consult with Anya Bassett, the Director of Studies, in that event. Crashed computers and slow printers are not considered valid causes for extensions. You should plan to have the first draft of your essay finished by the beginning of October to allow three weeks for revisions and proofreading and a final week to assemble the thesis.
